

THE REALM OF SOCIETY

FLOWER MISSION DECIDES TO GIVE A FAIR NEXT NOVEMBER.

An Opera to Be Produced—A Word of Two About Fans and Waist Belts—Personal Mention.

The Flower Mission has decided to give a fair again this fall. It will, as usual, come in November, just in time for the Christmas holiday shopping in the fine embroideries and other articles. A special effort will be made to have the evening entertainments attractive, and it has already been decided to give "Patience." The singers have not been chosen, but the best singers of the city will take part. Mrs. Augustus Lynch Mason and Mrs. Benjamin Harrison are on the committee arranging for the opera.

A woman of sense advises other women never to go anywhere in summer without a fan. If one gets into a hot room at a reception it is very much needed. If it be at the theater or any entertainment in a close room it is indispensable. There are all sorts of fans, but the most inconspicuous one for a hot summer day is one of the ostrich-feather ones. They suggest warmth, and the air which they produce is not as refreshing as from something that is not so fine looking and feathery. The little Empire fans, which are now considered the style and which have taken the place of the enormous ones which used to take the muscles of the arm and even of the back to wield, are pretty to see, but they create no little amusement when they are used by fat women, who have to get them close to their faces and move them swiftly in order to get any air from them. It would seem that the Empire fans are very fine for anyone who desires to have a collection of fans, for they are very artistic in their decoration and fine in the material of which they are composed. There is as much fashion in the style of fan one carries as there is in the style of dress one wears. It is a part of the general toilet. A pretty, gracefully shaped fan, harmonizing with the tone of the gown worn, is a necessary which is to-day considered indispensable.

It is not uninteresting to watch the procession of colors which reign in fashion's realm. At one time, not many years ago, the procession was a black one. Women on the street never wore anything else. Anything the least bit bright was considered the height of bad taste, and one could walk from shopping into a house where there was a funeral, sit among the mourners and not feel out of place, as far as her garb was concerned. Afterward brown came in, and it was of all shades. Red then took its place as a leading color. Pink reigned supreme, and has lasted longer than almost any other color. For two years green has been all the fashion, and now blue is supreme. The French blue are the favorites, together with the blue of the corn flower. There are any number of shades of blue which are unlike the blue brought out in previous years. The blues are so much in demand that they are being made in a great number of material and all varieties of articles. The house without a blue room, whether it be a girl's dressing room or a woman's bedroom, is not complete. The costume without a bit of blue is lacking, and the hand adorned with rings that are not turquoise is not in style at all. Blue is crying for many complements, but now the brunette must not wear it. It is not how it makes her look, for being the proper color, she must put it on. It may be that last year she thought she could not wear it, but next year she will wonder how she did it, for the present the girl of style will have something blue.

Next to having a separation between the skirt and the body, the shirt, nothing is worse to see than the new devices for keeping the two together. There ought not to be a suggestion at the back of the belt that there is any need for a pin or any other fastening, but as long as there are different skirts and blouses, there will be some such trouble as a "hiking" of the one, or a dropping of the other. The new fastenings that have been brought out make it appear that the wearer has been the patron of a tailor who has not a first-class one at that. No one with any sense of the beautiful in dress would wear such things. It was a very inartistic jewelry which brought out the fancy safety pins for belts, and just as inartistic a public who purchased them. To matter worse, some individual introduced the narrow belt and made it of leather. Now, there are few very thin belts, and the narrow belt and do it with any grace. Those who do, spend money, it is not in arranging the skirt and waist so that the narrow belt will cover the line where the two meet, and the narrow belt will be themselves as others see them, their ideas of the beauties of narrow belts would change. When the narrow belt is introduced, she always does such rash things, she is "just awful." Narrow belts will go out of style soon, for which attitude should be expressed. The belts are wonderfully beautiful in design and have buckles that are of exquisite design. When their day is past, let them be put away with the collection of keepsakes. The reminder of what was once worn for fashion's sake.

An exchange says: "The very correct maiden has colored studs and sleeve links to match each shirt waist." And they are exceedingly attractive. They may be bought in the pretty vignette designs in red, several shades of blue, green, brown and black enamel centers, the frame for the colors being of silver.
